MUSICAL AND DRABATIC.

Mr. Everly's Benefit. The size and character of the audience at the Arch Street Theatre on Saturday evening were in a high degree complimentary to one of the most respected members of the company. Mr. Everly has only been connected with the dramatic profession a comparatively short time, but he has already made his mark as a conscientious and artistic performer, and has established himself as a favorite with those whose esteem is best worth having. He brought to the stage an enthusiasm for the drama, culture, refinement and talent, and his progress during the past two years has been as marked as it has been gratifying to his friends. The members of a stock com pany labor und r the disadvantage that, being engaged for particular lines of business, they are frequently obliged to appear in parts which are distasteful, unsuited to their talents, or which are of such small importance that they have scarcely an opportunity to distinguish themselves. The training obtained in this way, however, is invaluable; and despite the attractions which the star system must have for an actor of talent, who desires to represent those characters to which he can do most justice, the advantages of belonging to a well-managed, well-trained stock company, acoustomed to pull together and to depend upon their own resources, are so great as to more than counterbalance the inconveniences.

The star system, we are happy to believe is falling into disrepute, and it is a hopefu sign for the drama that such is the case. Most playgoers, except in very rare instances, where performers of very distinguished talents are concerned, would rather see plays creditably acted throughout than to see one character personated supremely well and all the rest mangled by men and women who have no higher idea of their art than the number o dollars and cents paid them weekly by the treasurer. It is one of the advantages of bene fit nights that an actor is enabled, at leas once in a year, to select such plays as will ena ble him to show what he is capable of doing Mr. Everly, on Saturday evening, presented a strong bill in Marston's drama of Strathmore and the domestic piece entitled Helping Hands The first named is a very beautiful play, the scene of which is laid in the time of the persecution of the Covenanters in Scotland. The conflict between love and duty, between the treason which was a duty to the cause of humanity and religious liberty, and the loyalty which represented grievous oppression and the slaughter of innocent men, women, and children by cruel, unscrupulous, and bigoted tyrants, gives rise to a number of highly dramatic situations. The author has worked out his plot in this piece with much skill, and if well acted it is exceedingly effective.

Mr. Everly's personation of "Strathmore" was a performance of much merit. Two of the situations in the drams, at least, made large demands on the talents of the actor, and these were met in a manner that excited the warmest applause. The father of the woman he loves is accused of having slaughtered in cold blood a covenanting preacher and a little band of his people, while they were engaged in the act of worship. "Strathmore," whose comrades will not allow him to shrink from his duty, captures the old knight's castle, but hopes, almost against hope, that the charge against him may prove untrue, or at least that some extenuating circumstances will appear that will afford an excuse for sparing his life. Every point in the charge, however, is admitted by the culprit, and his doom is pronounced. The daughter then endeavors to intercede for her father's life, but her powerful appeal falls to move the hero from his purpose, although he sinks fainting at her feet, overcome by his agonizing emotions as he denies

A rescue takes place, the castle is recaptured and "Strathmore" is wounded and taken prisoner. Intelligence is received that large reinforcements are rapidly advancing, and that "Strathmore's" name is among those to whom no mercy is to be shown. At the intercession of his daughter, "Sir Rupert Lorn" consents to forget the past, and to secure the life of "Strathmore" If he will renounce his allegiance to the cause of the rebeis. "Katharine" hurries to him with the paper, and entreats him by his affection for her to sign it. Every inducement to life and the hope of fature happiness is held out to him; but he asks what would life be worth at the price of honor and years of contempt, and then leaves it with her whether he shall sign the paper or not. The woman, inspired by his heroism, rises to the dignity of the situation, and throwing the paper from her pids him rather die first.

The varied emotions of the drama were finely rendered by Mr. Everly, and his acting, espe cially in the above-mentioned scenes, was distinguished by genuine tragic power and passion, without rant or bluster. The performance altogether was highly cred itable, and we should be pleased to see Mr. Everly often in parts like this, in which he can do himself full justice.

Miss Price gave an exceedingly good persons tion of "Katharine Lorn," and played with a force and expression which was as unexpected as it was gratifying. Most of the other characters were very fairly sustained, and Miss Davenport, who undertook the part of "Isabei" at very short notice, on account of the illness of Mrs. Creese, would have given a very good per. formance if she had infused a little more ant mation into it. This young lady does no tappear to understand the importance of expressive by-plsy, especially in serious roles. The circums under which she appeared, however, on Saturday, to a great extent preclude criti cism, but the hint we have given is worth heeding under all circumstances.

Mr. Everly and Miss Price were called before the curtain at the end of the third act, and at the conclusion of the play the beneficiary appeared and tendered his acknowledgments to the audience.

A handsome service of silver, consisting of pitcher and goblets, weighing two hundred cunces, which had been prepared by a number of Mr. Everly's friends, was then presented by Colonel James Page in the following address:-Mr. Everly:-A number of your personal triends and admirers have requested me, on this occasion of your benefit night, to present this occasion of your benefit night, to present you with a substantial token of their esteem and regard. In the performance of this agreeable duty, little need be said. A few brief sentences will explain its object. The profession you have chosen is a most difficult and ardsous one. To schieve anything like prominence in it, there must be anxious days and sleepless nights, with an untiring devotion to the neverending demands of the art, it is one in which the great dramatist has declared your duty, and that of all who aspire to the stage, to be "to show virtue her own features, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time, her form and pressure—to hold, as 't were, the mir or up to nature." This is no light task. It will require study, applicatime, ther form and pressure—to hold, as 't were, the mir or up to nature." This is no light task. It will require study, application, perseverance, mind. These, your friends believe, you possess. Gratified by your progress thus far, with the opportunities presented at this theatre, under the management of an excellent lady and admirable actress, they doubt not you will continue to rise in and addrn the profession of which you are a part, while in private life you will be, as ever, the true gentleman. Not only as a testimonial of esteem and regard, but as a stimulant to you in your career, and as an incentive to further improvement, I now hand you this beautiful service of plate, with the sincere good wishes of these who have caused it to be prepared for

The performance concluded with the pleasing domestic drama of Helping Hands, in which Mr. Everly gave a very excellent personation of Lorenz Hartman," the blind musician,

THE PUREST AND SAPEST .- The efficacy of Hos-TETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS as a specific for recruiting the enfeebled body and cheering the desponding mind has passed into a proverb. In the United States, where this marvellous tonic has borne down all opposition and eclipsed all rivalry, the demand for it has annually increased in a heavier and heavier ratio for years, until, at last, the regular sales of this preparation exceed those of all other stomachies combined. Eminent members of the medical profession and hospital surgeons without number have candidly admitted that the pharmacopedia of the faculty contains no prescription that produces such beneficial effects in dyspepsia, general debility and nervous diseases, as Hostetter's Bit-TERS. To use the language of a venerable physician of New York, "The Bitters are the purest stimulant and the safest tonic we have." But the uses of the great vegetable antidote are much more comprehensive than such praise would imply. As a PREPARA-TORY ANTIDOTE to epidemic disease, a genial stimulant, a premoter of constitutional vigor, an appetizer, a stomachic, and a remedy for nervous debility, no medicinal preparation has ever attained the reputation of HOSTETTER'S BITTERS. It is the HOUSEHOLD TONIC of the AMERICAN PEOPLE, and, in all human probability, will be so for centuries to come. The magnates of Science recognize its merits; and that it is emphatically the medicine of the masses is proved by its vast and ever-increasing sales.

FROM TRUSTWORTHY DATA it has been estimated that at least one-fourth of all persons born in the United States have, at birth, lungs in a tuberculous condition, and in consequence are predisposed to Pulmonary Complaints; yet it is equally well established that this predisposition need not end in Consumption, Asthma, or any other lung disease, if due care and watchfulness be observed, and all exciting causes promptly treated as they arise. It is in just such cases DR. D. JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT exercises its most beneficial effects, and has produced the largest proportion of its cures. Besides promptly removing Coughs and Colds, which, when left to themselves, are the most common cause of tuberculous development, the Expectorant allays any inflammation which may exist, and by promoting easy expectoration cleanses the lungs of the substances which clog them up, and which rapidly destroy when suffered to remain.
